

Abramelin's Magickal Word Squares

Compiled and Corrected for the First Time

Aaron Leitch

The following word-squares (or “acrostics”) have been compiled from Book IV of George Dehn and Steven Guth's English translation of the Book of Abramelin. These are the completed squares taken from the German original(s), rather than the corrupted and incomplete versions found in the French recension translated by S. L. Mathers.

However, in this new translation, Mr. Dehn did not compile the magickal words into grid-squares. (According to his notes, the manuscripts he used for his translation contained the words written only in line form.) Therefore, I have undertaken the task of inserting them into proper grids. What follows is the first time English speaking students have seen the Abramelin word squares in their compiled (and corrected) form.

As I placed Abramelin's words into their grids, I discovered a large number of errors. (Most of them apparently from the original manuscript, and not the fault of Mr. Dehn or Mr. Guth!) Some were apparent transcription errors- such as confounding “c” and “e”, “f” and “s”, or “b” and “k”. I also found several places where adjacent letters were transposed- similar to writing the word “receive” as “recieve.” Some of the errors seemed unexplainable, unless they were deliberate blinks. Lending weight to that theory, I also found a few of the squares inverted, backward or mis-labeled.

In each case of correction, I have also included Dehn's text of the original square in a footnote. Out of 242 squares, I have found approximately 156 in need of correction- not counting several instances where labels were applied to the wrong squares. Only one square in the entire set was irreparable.

Methods of Correction

The easiest squares to correct were the simple Acrostics and the 'Perfect' Double Acrostics- both of which contain repeated patterns throughout the square. It was more difficult to judge the regular Double Acrostics, though I have made my best attempts to correct them where necessary. There were very few cases where I had to choose between one letter or another, or even fill in a missing letter. In such cases I would either go with intuition (usually based on the overall pattern in the square), and/or analyze the square linguistically to discover an acceptable spelling. (The latter was often used to confirm or correct the former.)

I also compared Dehn's work to the French recension each step along the way. Mathers' notes have been surprisingly useful (given the sorry state of the text he was using)- and I have referenced each case where his notations aided me in correcting a square.

As a side note: I suspect the author of the French version was working on these same corrections, but left the task incomplete. With this document, the French author's long-awaited goal is finally realized.

Further Analysis Ongoing...

This document is only a presentation of the corrected Abramelin squares, with notes explaining the differences between my squares and Mr. Dehn's. I have not included the bulk of my linguistic analysis of the words themselves, as that work is ongoing. I have already compared the Abramelin squares to all of Mathers' linguistic notes, and cross-referenced both to Biblical Hebrew, Greek and Latin Lexicons. I am, of course, also using the Lexicons to find etymologies that Mathers missed (most often due to the corruption of the French squares).

In many cases, the linguistic "decoding" of a square has resulted in further corrections to its lettering. I have nearly completed the Hebrew analysis (save for a few squares that have eluded me, and may not turn out to be Hebrew at all), and some of the Greek and Latin as well. Fortunately, the Abramelin squares are overwhelmingly based upon Hebrew, so I do not expect any further significant corrections to the squares' lettering. In the case of further corrections, I will update this manuscript in the future. My complete linguistic analysis will appear in a later work.

A Brief Overview of Word Squares

Note these three types of word-squares:

Acrostic ("Staircase"): reads the same forward and downward:

B	I	T
I	C	E
T	E	N

Double Acrostic: reads differently forward and downward:

T	O	O
U	R	N
B	E	E

'Perfect' Double Acrostic: reads the same forward, downward, backward and upward:

S	A	T	O	R
A	R	E	P	O
T	E	N	E	T
O	P	E	R	A
R	O	T	A	S

Also note these common aspects of word-squares. Any square may have one or more of them:

Frame: a single word written around the circumference of a square, in the fashion of a 'Perfect' Double Acrostic. (This does not mean the entire square will be a 'Perfect' Double Acrostic):

S	A	T	O	R
A				O
T				T
O				A
R	O	T	A	S

Central Cross: only exists in an odd-numbered square. Consists of a single word (usually a palindrome- spelled the same way forward or backward) written across the center of the square:

		T
		E

Palindromes: Palindromes are always preferable anywhere in a magickal word-square. I have also discovered that some of the Abramelin squares contain "reflected palindromes" (as I call them).

This means a smaller word has been written forward and backward in mirror reflection, creating a new (more mystical-looking) palindrome. For example, we might spell the common word HELLO as a reflected palindrome:

HELLOLEH

The quintessential magickal word square is a 'Perfect' Double Acrostic made entirely of palindromes.

Unstandardized Spelling: Proper spelling is not necessary for magickal word-squares. Especially when using languages such as Greek and Hebrew, one is dealing with transliterations anyway. One may shrink, stretch or spell the words in nearly any manner to make them fit the square. Only one rule restricts this- the word must be phonetically like the original. A square should be decipherable by other scholars, even hundreds of years into the future.

In a later work, I will provide a more complete account of word squares (mundane and magickal), how to create them and how to work with them.

Note on 16/9: This square was extremely damaged. I saw only slight hints that- perhaps!- the square was intended as a standard Acrostic with a palindrome central cross. However, it could also have been intended as a straightforward Double Acrostic. In the latter case, the square can not be corrected due to missing letters in the German original. Thus I have opted for the above correction.

Note on 20/14: This square appears to be a Double Acrostic with a Frame. I have corrected the Frame, but I can not guess at the rest of the square, or its two missing letters. I see no hint that this square should be a regular Acrostic or a 'Perfect' Double Acrostic. This appears to be the only irreparable square in the entire book.

Note on 22/1: The above is my best attempt to correct this square.

The "H" in the lower-right corner is entirely speculation on my part. Also note this square may be mis-labeled. The OT

Hebrew word Geled means "human skin" (Geledim would be the plural)

Thus this square could be intended for causing skin diseases.

R	A	U	E	F
A	R	G	A	R
U	G	I	R	P
E	A	R	L	I
F	R	P	I	L

Note on 23/1: According to the original German, the principle word here might be RAUEH or RAUES. If the former, it could be the Hebrew word Ruk (RUQ), meaning "to make empty." The latter choice makes little sense, unless the "S" is a misprint for "F" (common in these squares), giving us RAUEF, possibly from the Hebrew word Ruph (RUPh), meaning "to shake, rock, tremble." I have chosen the latter as the more likely choice.

As a side note, the French author supposed that RAUEH should be NAUEH, which Mathers suggests is from the Hebrew word Naveh (NUH), meaning "habitation."

F	O	L	A	F	U	F

Note on 27/31: I can't help but suspect this square should begin with BUFALOS. It is common in the German originals for "F" to be mistaken for "B" or "S." I haven't found the word FUFALOF in any language as of yet.

27/32. Wild Pigs<sup>145</sup>

F	E	S	E	K

Note on 28/4: Dehn does not record the above square. However, it does appear in this chapter in Dresden MS 2 (see Dehn, p. 186, illustration). The picture includes three squares, the third of which does not resemble number 3 above. Therefore this could be the missing fourth square.

It does resemble square number 2, but this may be due to the fact that both squares are for coins. (Keceph is OT Hebrew for “silver, money, coins.”) The author of the French text seems to have made a similar assumption, as he also provided two similar squares for coins in this chapter.

H	A	N	I	G	E	N

Note on 30/1: The above is my best attempt to correct this square, based upon the assumption it was intended as a 'Perfect' Double Acrostic. Note that the Hebrew word Neginah (NGYNH) means “music, song, mocking song.”

30/2. That the Spirits Appear as Monkeys and Perform all Sorts of Strange Dances<sup>155</sup>

M	E	K	O	L	A	H
